BEST WAY TO FISH

"YOO-HOO!" May called out as she saw Awful Oscar walking down the street with a fishing pole over his shoulder.

Oscar waited until May caught up to him.

"Where are you going?" May asked, as she ran up.

"Fishing."

"Oh, I'd like to go, too, Oscar. Will you take me?"

"But you don't know anything about fishing, May. You're even afraid of worms."

"I don't have to use worms."

"Aw, who ever heard of fishing without worms?" Oscar asked, laughingly.

"All right, smartie," May said, "will you buy me an ice cream soda if I catch more fish than you?"

"Without using worms?" added Oscar.

"Without using worms," repeated May.

"And you'll buy me an ice cream soda if I catch more fish than you. Huh?"

"That's right, Oscar."

"It's a deal."

"Wait here for me while I go home and get my fishing equipment," May said.

She ran home and Awful Oscar sat down on the curb smiling at the easy wager he had just made. After all, how can anybody, let alone a girl, catch fish without using worms?"

May was back in a few minutes carrying a small box and a baseball bat.

"What's that!" shouted Oscar, with a puzzled look on his face.

"My fishing equipment," answered May, seriously.

"But . . . but . . . that's a baseball bat," Oscar stammered.

"That's right, Oscar. Shall we get going now?"

Awful Oscar laughed so hard that tears came to his eyes. "Going fishing with a baseball bat." He shook his head and burst out laughing again.

But May was very quiet and serious. They walked for a half hour over a narrow dirt road and soon came to the old fishing hole.

Awful Oscar baited his hook with a wiggling worm, then sat down on the bank and threw his line into the water.

"I'm going up the bank a little ways to fish, Oscar," May said. "I can't stand to see you put those poor little worms on your hook."

"Okay, May, but don't catch any whales with that baseball bat," Oscar said, following his words with a big horse laugh.

Fifteen minutes passed and Oscar hadn't caught a single fish. He changed his bait for the seventeenth time and threw his line in again.

"There's no fishing allowed here," a heavy voice bellowed.

Oscar turned and there stood a big man with a dark moustache. A huge star was pinned to his coat.

"B-but I-I'm not fishing, Mr. Warden," Oscar said in a shaking voice.

"You're not?"

"No, I'm just drowning worms."

"Oh," the game warden said, scratching his head. "No law against that, I guess." And he walked away.

After two hours of fishing, Oscar had caught three little fishes. He proudly strung them up and got up to look for May.

He found her propped against a tree, fast asleep. Awful Oscar woke her up.

"I guess I win, May. Look at the three beauties I caught," Oscar held up the three tiny fishes and beamed.

May laughed, pointing toward a big bush. There on the ground was a pile of fish as high as Oscar.

Awful slapped his hand to his head. He rubbed his eyes, hoping that the pile of fish would disappear. But they didn't.

"How'd you do it, May?"

"With the baseball bat."

"With the baseball bat?" Oscar shrieked.

"And pepper."

"Pepper?" Oscar almost lost his voice on that one.

"Yep."

"But-but-how?"

"Very simple, Oscar," May started to explain. "I simply sprinkled pepper on the water. Then when the fishes sniffed it and came up, with their eyes shut, to sneeze . . . I bopped them on the head with the baseball bat."

"Oh, no," Oscar moaned.

"Oh, yes," May said. "Let's go have a soda . . . on you."

THE DENTIST

"PAINLESS DENTIST," Awful Oscar read the sign out loud. "Come on, Shorty, this is the right place."

"Aren't you scared at all?" Shorty asked in a trembling voice as he followed Oscar. "Not even a little tiny bit?"

"Naw," Oscar replied bravely, as he pushed open the door and both boys stepped inside. They sat down and waited.

"I can't get over how brave you are about all this, Oscar," Shorty shook his head.

"There are times, my friend, when we must stop acting like boys and face things like grown men." Oscar expanded his peanut-sized chest and sighed.

A half hour went by and finally the dentist came out.

"Ah, good morning, boys," he said with a big grin on his face.

"Hi, Doc," Oscar and Shorty greeted the man.

"I'm sorry that I kept you boys waiting," the dentist apologized, "but I misplaced my false teeth and had a hard time finding them."

Oscar and Shorty looked at each other and gulped.

"I want a tooth pulled out and I don't want any gas, because we're in a hurry," Oscar told the dentist.

"You're a very brave lad," said the dentist, slapping Oscar on the shoulder. "Which tooth is it?"

"Open up your mouth, Shorty," Oscar told his pal, "and show the dentist the tooth that hurts you."

The dentist put the shivering Shorty into the chair and then looked into the boy's mouth.

"Oh, it's a baby tooth," said the dentist.

"Yeah," Shorty yelled out. "Well, it certainly hurts like an adult tooth."

"We'll have it out in a few minutes, my boy. We won't even feel it being pulled."

"Maybe we won't feel it, Doc," Shorty said with a shudder, "but if you hear somebody yelling, it won't be you!"

The man worked over Shorty, then picked up his forceps.

"Open your mouth wide."

Shorty shut his eyes tight and opened his mouth as Oscar held on to his hands. Shorty felt the dentist pulling . . . pulling . . . pulling . . . then pop . . . and the dentist held a gleaming white object between his forceps.

"There, young man, that didn't hurt, did it?" the dentist asked, holding the forceps in front of Shorty's nose.

"Why should it hurt?" Shorty asked. "That's the button of my shirt collar you pulled."

"Oh, darn, so it is," said the dentist. "I can't see a thing without my glasses. I'll just have to find them. The dentist left the room to search for his glasses.

When he came back, he picked up the forceps and went right to work. Shorty sat still, but Oscar yelled and screamed and kicked. The dentist pulled and yanked and tugged. Finally the tooth came out.

"There, now it is out," the dentist said proudly.

"You're wrong, Doc," Awful Oscar said angrily.

"Wrong tooth?" the dentist asked sadly.

"Wrong patient" Awful Oscar shouted. "Shorty let me try out the chair when you went out looking for your glasses."

"Oh, darn it," the dentist stamped his foot on the floor. "I got the wrong glasses."

"And we've got the wrong dentist," both Oscar and Shorty yelled out as they ran out of the office.

"It's a funny thing, Oscar," Shorty said to his pal as they walked down the street. "That's a real painless dentist . . . it didn't hurt me at all when he pulled your tooth."
